FOREWORD

WE, the Annual Staff, present to you the third volume of the SORORIAN.

It has been said that "When we can't act as we wish, we must act as we can." So we, the Staff, feel about our efforts in bringing to pass this issue of the SORORIAN.

We have striven earnestly and conscientiously to give to you the best annual we could possibly issue.

We hope that you will bear with us sympathetically as you turn the leaves of this book.

Try to imagine the everyday events and happenings of life as they really are with us.

Leaving the few following words as a benediction, we submit to you the result of many hours of weary toil; and it is a pleasure to us that we are able to do it.

"Turn my pages—never mind
If you like not all you find,
Think not all the grains are gold
Sacramento's sand banks hold.

"Best for worst shall make amends,
Find us, keep us, leave us friends,
Till perchance, we meet again—
Benedicte—amen!"

DEDICATION

In loving memory of our beloved friend and trustee, Mr. Charles Stark Sullivan, we dedicate this volume of the Sororian. Our hearts were dedicated to him long ago.

Truly it may be said of him that he was the best friend a college and a college girl have ever had.

Mr. C.S. Sullivan

Mr. Charles S. Sullivan

BORN in Anderson, S. C., May 26, 1866, he has always been a man of affairs in the City of Anderson. Public spirited, influential and generous, was he—our much beloved trustee. When the subject of Anderson College was but an air castle, Mr. Sullivan was determined that it should not always be a castle in the air, and it was mainly through his efforts that we are to-day real flesh and blood.

Mr. Sullivan, was, without doubt, the best friend we have ever had.

Aside from the material contributions which he made—namely, the President's home, a handsome brick building; the equipment for the gymnasium, and the beautiful velvet curtain for our stage—he gave to us much of his physical strength and energy, leaving no possible stone unturned for our betterment.

It was in behalf of Anderson College that he used his last energies, for he had gone to Columbia, S. C., to make arrangements for the appropriation of sufficient funds to make this an ideal school.

He died in Columbia on Monday night, October 13, 1915, at half past eleven o'clock.

The Sororists

The Passing of the Storm

The wild winds howl, the heavens rain,
And moonless night broods o'er the plain.

Across the dark, 'tween earth and sky,
The black drops fall; the tree frogs cry.

While every rock and twig and sprout,
Pours forth a myriad water spout.

And now deep pools and flooded streams
Awake in turbid midnight dreams.

Anon the moon gleams thru the clouds,
Her silver face in misty shrouds.

And daring stars peep out at will,
Clear heaven smiles, serenely still.

—N. GENTRY, '16.

A decorative border in a light, stippled style surrounds the central text. It features stylized flowers, leaves, and vines. A large, prominent flower is in the upper left, and another is in the lower right. The border is contained within a thin rectangular frame.

Anderson, S. C.

“ARIE”

“If I’m convinced against my will, I’m of the same opinion still”

Ruth has been with us four years. Three years of this time were given to deciding the question whether or not she would board in the dormitories, so great was her love for “home” and “family.” However, at the beginning of the fourth year she came, on the condition that Mamma or “Dad” would come for her every Saturday. Ruth is a wise philosopher—steadfastly expressing her opinion on every subject. She has a lovable disposition and has added much to the home life of our class.

HELEN BURRISS, B. A.

Anderson, S. C.

“HEFTY”

“Contentment, parent of delight”

“Laugh, and grow plump” is what Helen believes in, for she certainly is a jolly, good soul. Without her, the life of our class would lose some good portion of its brightness. Helen always stands ready to lend a helping hand to those who need it, and we see for her a future overflowing with the joys of life.

NELLE DARRACOTT, B. A.

Anderson, S. C.

“COTTE”

“Ever studious, quiet and gentle”

Nelle's most noticeable characteristic is ability to speak truth on all occasions and to everybody alike. In German, Nelle has always been a shining light and in everything else she is proficient, except at chorus. There Nelle shuts up like a clam. She may have music in her soul, but she is a little timid about vocalizing.

“Alas! for those that never sing,

But die with all their music in them.”

NELL GENTRY, B. A.

Anderson, S. C.

“MIDG”

“*Mine honor is my life, both grown in out.
Take honor from me, and life is done.*”

Here we find Nell—“always on the job”—never failing to embrace her opportunities. Nell has a peculiar way of entwining herself around a person's heartstrings—a gift not bestowed upon many people. She is big, yes, but not only in size. We can truly say, “There's not the slightest ‘little’ thing about her.”

"BEBBY"

"She paused but a moment in her flight, and we were blessed with a song."

Happy-hearted! jolly! and laughing! These three adjectives are Louise's constant companions. It could be said of her that she is always in a good humor. She is truly the sunshine of our Class. One has only to listen to hear the full clear notes of her pretty voice, for she sings morning, noon and night. Louise, like her roommate, "says little, but thinks much." There's no telling what may be the outgrowth of that "uncle" or that "automobile."

"RITA"

"The reason firm, the temperate will, endurance, foresight, strength and skill."

Truly the words may be said of her. Rita is one of those persons who can do anything she makes up her mind to do, and she makes up her mind to do a great many things.

Though in her youth she left us to worship at the feet of Mozart, Wagner and Beethoven, we soon forgave her and count ourselves blessed for the one musical note on our staff of Seniorhood. We're expecting 'great things of Rita, but we fear that under those harmonious strains not only have her intellectual powers increased, but that her heart has become affected as well, for we hear her sing with Shakespeare, "If music be the food of love, play on."

“A true woman, modest and simple and sweet”

It's to Nelle we look for the latest fads in dressing. She can always manage to adopt the “yoguish” touch. Nelle is a studious, happy girl, never complaining or grumbling, but always taking life for the very best there is in it. She has traveled through the long four years of toil and strife and now comes to the bitter end victorious.

Zuke is our “littlest”, most carefree member. Always on her post of duty when its Duty Time. Yet, she believes in enjoying life to its fullest. Were it not for the huge amount of anxiety expended on her preparations for English, I believe Zuke would pronounce life “Excellent”—but she has not been anxious in vain, for her labor has reaped bountiful rewards. “MAC” “GOSS”

“Do you not know I’m a woman—when I think I must speak.”

This splendid specimen of “Tongue running ability” has been with us lo! these four long years. Lou Nelle can talk! There’s no use debating the subject. A graphophone or any other specimen of talking machine cannot compare with our own human talking machine. I am sure dear Mr. Edison would lay down his life’s work in despair if he were to listen to old Mac for fifteen minutes, and should think he had to perfect anything to surpass or equal her. Kind hearted, true and staunch, Lou Nelle has made scores of friends and nobody can ever take her place in our hearts.

“PREACH”

“She is of so free, so kind, so apt, so blessed a disposition”

We needn’t tell you about Ethel’s disposition, for you know her, too. Ethel is a good comrade. Hail-fellow-well-met kind. For four years we have had occasion to observe her studious, quiet manner. Yet we would warn you that Ethel is not entirely void of those symptoms that accompany a flirtations propensity. We have noted her candy (boxes) and numerous letters. She’ll surely not sail alone upon the sea of life for more than forty years. Secretary, Y. W. A., '15-'16; Secretary Lanier Society, '15-'16; Member Varsity Basket Ball Team.

"Diligence is the mother of good fortune."

If it were customary to change people's names, Sara's certainly ought to be changed from Sara to Diligence or Conscientiousness, for she certainly is a combination of both. Sara has won many friends in school. Even though she has always been a day student she seems to be able to get "in" with most of the boarders remarkably well. We wish for her all that is good after she turns from her Alma Mater to face the world.

SYBIL IZETTA PRUITT, B. A.

Starr, S. C.

"Consistency, thou art a jewel."

What is there too good to be said about Izetta. She is truly a jewel in more respects than that of consistency. One look into her pretty brown eyes will prove to you that she is one of the best "all-round" classmates in the world. Nobody but a Society President can ever truly appreciate Izetta's true worth as a program committee chairman, a secretary and critic. When there's a responsibility to be borne she is always willing to carry her share of the burden. Such true worth cannot be long hidden and it is our guess that ere long Izetta will have "Some One" to help share the future responsibilities.

"Modesty seldom resides in a breast that is not enriched in a breast of nobler virtues."

Here is the "joy of our hearts" in the athletic line. Maggie is some basket ball player and tennis champion as well. Truly, she could exchange places with the real "Modesty" in "Everywoman" for she is modesty itself. She has won the hearts of all her classmates, and we feel proud to own a member as rare as she. "SKIT"

*"And still we gazed, and still the wonder grew,
How one small head could carry all she knew."*

"Skit"! That very name itself, left alone on the page, would imply as much or more than pages written about her. What would we do without her—our "little" Sponsor. If you had to get from Skit, her sterling qualities, I'm afraid you'd never know she had them. But "still water runs deep" you know, and if we don't watch her, she will be getting something more than an ordinary sized letter in the mail that comes from the Clemson direction.

Karan comes to school every day on the inter-urban, thereby giving us her acquaintance in broken doses. Studious, reserved and with a sufficient amount of dignity, she lives among us during the few short hours of the day, and we depart from her with the regret that it was our misfortune not to have known her better.

EULA MAE TURBEVILLE, B. A.

Charleston, S. C.

"Wisdom is better far than rubies."

We proudly show this classmate to the world as our only "Charlestonian." Eula Mae came to join us in September and we have been made to realize that there must be a few shining stars who have periled the hardships of Fresh., Soph. and Junior "isms" in other seas than Anderson College. Providence must surely have provided a place here for her in the very beginning, for she "fits" in so exactly that it is hard to realize that "she was not always thus." Grace is another who comes to us only to leave again. But she has never left in time of conflict and disaster. If she had given her consent to deprive herself the pleasure of riding on the interurban twice a day and remain among us for a while, we could tell you more about her. But this we have discerned, that Grace is amiable, happy-hearted and patriotic to her Alma Mater, and when it comes to fast speaking, Grace has won the "loving cup." Our fair friend Felicia has very aptly made the remark, "Kissing don't last, cookery do." We have always known Felicia to be of quick perception, but we realize more than ever that she knows whereof she speaks, for she is well versed in the art of love—and we can already understand now why she so persistently clung to the determination to graduate in cooking.

Senior Poem—“The Leave-Taking”

“Entreat us not to leave thee,
Alma Mater, Mother dear,
Send us not into the world,
Far from all thy love and care.

“We are young, we do not know
The world and all its way,
We’d remain and learn by thee,
Dear Mother, let us stay.”

“Nay, my children, do not urge me.
Now my task for you is done:
Others there are waiting for me,
Other works to be begun.

“Long I have taught and trained you
For life’s high and greater task,
My teachings may you ne’er forget,
This be the recompense I ask.

“Go you out into the world,
All I’ve done for you, I can,
Now I send you forth to serve,
Teach and help your fellow-man.

“Be ye women, strong and true,
Always this ideal be thine,
Live a life, that watching, I
May be proud to call you mine.

“Then, my children, fare you well,
Love, our hearts together binds,
Go, the blessing taking with thee
Of the Mother of thy minds.”

—C. S., '16.

Senior Class History

IN September, 1912, there assembled in this College a band of lasses, young and tender. Here we flocked to begin our dream of college life. The last brick had hardly been laid before we had arrived, bag and baggage, not to mention a few very homesick maidens with tearful eyes. It was a jolly verdant Freshman Class of some fifteen girls in all the glory of ignorance and youth that bravely faced the joys and hardships of the year 1912-13.

This first year was the source of great success, as in it the first seeds of knowledge were sown, and the first steps toward the goal which we now approach were taken. June came and with it all the glory and bliss of Sophomore wisdom.

When we returned the second year it was as wise Sophomores, for as usual we had some of the true characteristics of those beings. However, this assumed vanity soon decreased and we began to realize our station and to work for that more lofty place. Some of our members began to gain prominence as students and as all-round girls, showing that the '16 Class had the leaders that were to be.

Then came the time of Junior serenity. The laudable wisdom of last year was forever silenced in the struggle to ascend the steepest and most rugged part of our path. With firm-set minds we climbed steadily, gaining fame as we went. Our class is not only noted for its good students, but also as being alive on the athletic field. We are blessed, too, in having some musicians among our number. The close of the year found our class bearing a great many of the responsibilities, which they have continued to do with much skill.

Now we have come to that longed-for period in our lives. After all it isn't so much of an exalted feeling to look on the under-classmen. Of course, the first thing, we began to plan those Senior privileges; we spent some time in deciding what and how many we should have. At last they were carefully prepared and presented to the authorities. We have received unlimited pleasures from "That Privilege."

Besides the many forms of greatness achieved and those that have been thrust upon us, the Class has made history for both the College and itself by being the largest class to graduate and the first to begin as Freshmen.

As we are nearing the last round of our Alma Mater's ladder ready to take our first step into the great outside world, let us invoke her everlasting blessing upon us and pledge to her our never-failing loyalty.

Announcement

(Special to the State.)

ANDERSON, February 14, 1920.—Never was Anderson a scene of such splendor and gaiety as on last evening, when Miss Ruth Anderson became the bride of Lieutenant James R. Rochfield, of the U. S. Navy.

The ceremony was performed by the pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, where the wedding took place. The church was beautifully decorated by Miss Catherine Sullivan, one of Philadelphia's leading florists.

The altar was transformed into a fragrant and exquisite flower garden which seemed a bit of fairyland itself.

There were two walks in the garden leading to a mound of ferns and bride's roses, in front of which the bridal party stood. Just before the familiar, yet ever-loved strains of Lohengrin's wedding march, which was played by Directress M. Henry's Orchestra, broke the solemn stillness. Madame Sarah E. Stranathan, the bride's Senior Sponsor, sang in a most beautiful manner "Because." The bridesmaids then entered by twos and took their stand on either side of the altar.

They were Misses Nelle Darracott, Professor of German at Hollins College, Hollins, Va., Izetta Pruitt, gymnasium teacher at Miss Dargan's School in Boston, Eula May Turbeville, President of the Gentry-Turbeville Reformatory, in Tennessee, Nelle Gentry, Lady Principal of the same, Karan Traynham, Assistant in Science Department of Anderson College, and Zuliene Masters, President of the non-Examination League of South Carolina.

The maid of honor was Miss Lou Nelle McGee, language teacher in the Du Bois Deaf and Dumb School for boys.

After the ceremony the guests were invited to the home of the bride's parents, where an elegant wedding supper was served by Caterer Felicia Brown, of New York City. After which the bridal party gathered around the table and sang with joy and feeling:

Should auld acquaintance be forgot,
And never brought to mind,
Should auld acquaintance be forgot,
And days of Auld Lang Syne.

The Sororian

The bride's wedding gown, a creation of white satin and real lace, was designed by Modiste Helena Burriss, also of New York City. Her traveling suit was of dark blue broadcloth with hat and gloves to match.

Miss Anderson is one of Anderson's most charming young women and will be greatly missed by all.

Lieutenant Rochfield comes from one of the first families of Massachusetts, and is one of the wealthiest men of that State, having inherited a great part of his property from his first wife.

Among the out-of-town guests were:

Misses Ethel Norris, a nurse at John Hopkins Hospital; Sarah Princee, head of the Prince Beauty Parlors of Atlanta; Graee Watkins, expression teacher at Due West College; Nelle Martin, fat reducer at the Billy Bounce Institute; Louise Henry, superintendent of the Infant Department of Margaret Arnold Orphanage, and Maggie Shirley, president of South Carolina Suffrage League.

—LOUISE HENRY, Prophet, '16.

Last Will and Testament

WE, the Class of 1916, being thoroughly convinced of the fact that we are in full possession of all our mental faculties, do hereby make and publish this, our last will and testament, the same to be executed with all due respect and reverence by our loyal successors, the Freshmen, Sophomores and Juniors, respectively. We, at the same time, make null and void all former wills by us at any time heretofore made.

First, we do direct that our funeral services be conducted by our friends and well-wishers, the Faculty—only that the funeral be carried on with all the dignity and pomp that our situation in the College scale has merited.

As to such estate it has pleased the fates to give us, we, in our own strong minds, do dispose of the same as follows, viz.:

ITEM I. We will and bequeath to the College all scratches and damaged furniture, all holes made in the walls to hold our pennants and pictures, assured of the fact that the said scratches and cracks made by us will, to coming generations, prove useful and inspiring.

ITEM II. We give and bequeath to the Faculty a respite from our numerous petitions which they have so faithfully and diligently refused.

ITEM III. To the Juniors, realizing from sad and limited experience the need of a "privilege," we do hereby give and bequeath our treasured "privilege," to be used with care lest they be deprived of it.

ITEM IV. To the Sophomores we bequeath our "lowly and contrite spirits," entreating them to appropriate this legacy at the earliest possible moment, lest they be led astray by their sophistication and fallacious reasoning.

ITEM V. To the Juniors, feeling their need of a stronger memory, we give our remembrance of the Junior-Senior reception of 1915, and in addition to this little pocket editions of "Hints on how Juniors can entertain Seniors."

ITEM VI. To the Freshmen we leave all the delicate attention bestowed upon us by the rats, mice and other reptiles, being assured that they will ever prove themselves "friends that stick closer than a brother."

The Sororian

ITEM VII. We do give and bequeath to our sponsor our peculiar ability to wear bangs becomingly. This we do, knowing that she above all others envies us that gift.

ITEM VIII. Nell Martin, being encumbered with superfluous avoirdupois, does will to Miss Geary her excessive weight, the same to be used by the legatee to fill in hollow places.

ITEM IX. Sara Prince wills her "toe-proof" shoes to Mell Whitlock, the said shoes being guaranteed to screw a hole in any floor, thereby bringing immediate inspiration for answering any interrogation.

ITEM X. To Miss Demarest, Grace Watkins leaves her ability for slow and deliberate manner of speech.

ITEM XI. Catherine Sullivan, being of an accurate and precise disposition for estimating the measurements of any and every substance, bequeaths to Goode Burton her "bushel and drop" measures, feeling that Goode's garrulous inclination needs careful and exact balancing.

ITEM XII. Nell Gentry falteringly parts with her most serviceable and muchly-worn khaki suit, bestowing the same upon Emily Sullivan. Her conceit she leaves to Margaret Perrin.

ITEM XIII. Ruth Anderson bequeaths to her sponsor her deep patriotism to country, State and family, requesting that this devotion be taken by the recipient without argumentation.

ITEM XIV. Marguerite Henry pleadingly requests of Lois Anderson, her sister "in frater" to partake of the former's loyal devotion to her Frat pin, her Davidson mail, her Davidson pennant and pillow, the last mentioned to be taken upon the promise that none shall ever sit thereon.

ITEM XV. Zuliene Masters bequeaths to Annie Welborn her aversion to hurrying thru meals.

ITEM XVI. To Marie Nelson, Maggie Shirley wills her self-confidence and self-imagined executive ability, feeling that none other than she could use the same so advantageously, since she has already exceeded her in her great opinion of herself.

ITEM XVII. Eula Mae Turbeville and Louise Henry bestow their determination of carrying their points regardless, to Essie and Clara Cook, same to be used in the same sisterly manner as has been heretofore done.

ITEM XVIII. Karan Traynham leaves to Annie Laurie Dugan her eager responsiveness to Dr. Kinard's "mornin'" salutation.

The Sororian

ITEM XIX. To Fannie Sue McCurry, her romantic roommate, Ethel Norris leaves her approval of second marriages.

ITEM XX. Helen Burriss leaves her exuberance of verbosity to Bertha Hall.

ITEM XXI. Izetta Pruitt leaves to Emily Sullivan her unflinching manner of approach, her dauntless, unwavering courage and ability to meet defeat with a smile.

ITEM XXII. After much contemplation Lou Nelle McGee has decided to give full permission to all her underclassmen to come to her at any time for the latest dope in gossip.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, We, the Senior Class aforesaid, have hereunto subscribed our names and affixed our seal this the fifteenth day of January in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and sixteen.

Junior History

WE are just on the verge of entering the long-looked-for realm of Seniorhood; and as we look back over the years since we began our college career, we realize that we are almost at the goal for which we have striven so hard.

Since we first met in September, 1913, an unpretentious band of eighteen, we have worked and played together. Together we faced the trials, common to all Freshmen, and in vain we asserted our rights. Thus we flourished in the verdant realm of the Freshmen, until we were given the title of Sophomores. At this time we learned to "sophisticate the unsophisticated" and to hold familiar intercourse with the Seniors, a privilege hitherto denied. Now we have attained the Junior Class, blessed with all the dignity, ease and grace becoming such. In spite of the fact that our ranks are somewhat thinner than three years ago, we stand ready to enter our last year under the care of our Alma Mater with all the courage and zeal of well-bred Juniors.

The Sophomore Class History

IN the sixteenth of September, 1912, there came into being a class at Anderson College. It was born quietly and unnoticed. The class that had thus the privilege of beginning its life at the same time that the college started upon its career, consisted of Ruth Hembree, Olive Lee, Nannie Smith and Mary Stark Watkins. Perhaps the insignificance of our existence was based on the fact that we were Preps, and hence an unnecessary accumulation of society.

The following fall Gladys Chamblee, Nancy King and Edna Mays came to help us assume responsibility as older Preps. We didn't let the fact that we were still Preps stand in the way of our development, for we all had one thing in common, "hope," and we marched steadily ahead ready to fight any battle. During this year one of our members was favored by the muse of poetry and her best work appeared in that year's SORORIAN.

We were encouraged when we found ten others ready to take up the work with us as Freshmen. This increased our number to seventeen, and now we were organized and really became an important class of the College. Mary Starke Watkins, one of our charter members, was elected president. Annie Welborne was made vice-president, and Robbie Covin, secretary. We were so pleased with Ruth Hembree's previous success as a poet that she was elected as class poet for all years. This year we found ourselves entering upon new and altogether untried subjects. It seemed at times that we should be destroyed by such monsters as Trigonometry, Physics and Virgil, but for the most part we were victorious. It was with the greatest patience that we endured every trial and hardship of that year, because we were optimistic and hoped that in a year we should be Sophomores.

Shall we ever forget the day we realized that the long-looked-for desire of being a Sophomore was a reality? It is a feeling long to be remembered and an event of the utmost importance in the life of each of us. Marie Nelson was chosen as our president and leader for the year, with Annie Welborne as vice-president and Ruth Burdine, secretary. This year we have all formed ourselves and are earnestly striving for a definite goal. Three of our members, Annie Lamie Dugan, Amanda Shirley and Ruby Wardlaw, should be praised for the wonderful patience they have developed this year in waiting for the interurban. Louise Shearer should be congratulated for her punctuality at chapel and chorus and should be an example to the rest of us. During the year Ruth Burdine has become very much attached to the study of German, and has made up her mind to devote all her surplus time to it. Willie Bowie, the wee one of our number, has cultivated the bad habit of "cutting" French Class and should be reproved for such things.

One of our achievements worthy of mention is the victory we and the Seniors won over the Junior-Freshmen in basket ball on Thanksgiving Day.

Entre Nous

Our Class is the largest in Anderson College,
The other classes think we haven't much knowledge.
(But there's one thing we make it a rule not to do,
To go around boasting of the books we've been through.)

Proud Sophs, bright Juniors, and wise Seniors, all
Look quite dignified as they pass in the hall.
(We wonder why they think there's so little we know,
We're exactly where they were two or three years ago!)

The Sophs. think there's nothing that they don't know,
(Because, you see, they were here one year ago),
The Juniors pass us with pitying looks,
As they glance down upon our numerous books.

The Seniors say, "Freshman, you will shed many tears
Before you have been here all the four years."
(We don't mind very much what they say,
But just keep on studying harder each day.)

We patiently listen to the things they've had to do,
All the time thinking we're sure we can, too:
And some day (for we are getting more and more knowledge)—
We'll be the shining stars of Anderson College.

“Preps”

Here we are, bright, happy, and gay,
Destroying our ignorance by learning each day.
We make our ninetys and hundreds, too,
Just as the dignified Seniors do.

Miss Buxton has a very hard time each day
Teaching us English, to use the correct way;
When we go to class we must not forget
To bring sketch book, Baldwin, pencil, and tablet.

Miss Maddocks looks at us with a twinkling eye
When our Math, we do not know, but try;
She will always smile and say,
“Now girls, let’s try hard and do better next day.”

Latin and History, as we all know,
Are gained by hard study anywhere one may go.
Each study we let an A B C block be:
We’ll be dignified Seniors when we hold the Z.

NEWPORT NEWS, VA., Jan. 16, 1925.—An old maids' convention has been assembled in Newport News, which has caused much interest and excitement.

More than a million ladies belong to this old maids' convention and this being the national convention, quite that number are in attendance here in the old maids' hall. Not being a world-wide convention, it is marvelous to note how many single ladies do exist. The president of the northern and southern branches, Miss Mary Aiken, was too feeble to attend, but her able assistant and vice-president, Miss Marjorie Geary, of New Jersey, conducted the meetings with humility and contriteness. A very important paper on "The Reason We Can't Get Married," was read by Miss Marie Nelson. A very exciting number of the program was a debate, "Resolved, That if we could be renovated we might tip the matrimonial scale." Affirmative, Miss Lois Anderson, Miss Alice Ruby Buxton; Negative, Miss Myra Anderson, Miss Gladys Chamblee. Judges, Miss Florence Maddocks, Miss Ruth Anderson, Miss Catherine Sullivan. Verdict in favor of negative. They think there's no chance at whatever cost. The meeting was closed with the singing of a song, "Oh! for a man to cheer my heart." They repeated in unison, "A man, a man, my kingdom for a man." The following officers were elected for the coming year:

President, Miss I. Ropem.
Vice-President, U. Catchem.
Secretary, W. E. Marry.
Treasurer, H. E. Dodges.

One of our especially intelligent Seniors has been attempting to write verse since her Freshman year; after such laborious endeavors we are proud (?) to present the fruits of her toil:

RABBITS

Rabbits can easily move their ears,
A thing I've vainly tried for years.

"The Vic!!!"

There's a sound down in Tramp's Alley,
That will e'er in our memories stay;
It is framed in dreamy fancy.

We will love it forever and aye.

You can hear it in the morning,
When the rising bell has rung;
You can hear it after breakfast,
'Til the classes are begun.

You can hear it, too, at noontide,
Just before our midday meal:
You hear it every afternoon,
From four to six without fail!

Well, what's this sound so magic
That you hear the whole day thro'?
It's our wonderful little vietrola,
How we love it! You would, too.

If it played for you each morning,
From early dawn 'til close of day,
You'd always want it with you,
To chase the gloomy hours away.

Oh! Those grand Hawaiian records,
"Constancy" and "Huloo Hulli,"
"Down among the Sheltering Palms,"
"Oh, my Honey, wait for me."

"When I was a dreamer,
In the land of my best girl,
I looked in your eyes and found diamonds,
And sought for the gold in your curls."

"When the Angelus is ringing,"
"IndiAnna and the Whistling Coon,"
"Foxy Grandpa's Dancing
'Neath the Irish moon."

"Let's do that funny Fox Trot,"
"In the Moonlight on the Rhine,"
"Cohen owed me nineteen dollars,"
"In the good old Summertime."

All those dear familiar records,
That I now have brought to mind,
I'll leave to you as a token,
For the sake of "Auld Lang Syne."

Bangs!!

You may talk of the safe, sane Seniors,
You may sing their praises, too,
You may tell of all they've done
And all they're going to do,
But if you could see them now,
With this fuzz upon their brow,
A 'lookin' as tho' their head's about to freeze,
Methinks that you would find
That soon you'd change your mind,
And pray a Senior that you'd never be.

For it's bangs, bangs, bangs,
'Til all the crowd's quite crazy over bangs,
Two hairs? It matters not
One of them is cut,
For in spite of all, this crowd
Must have their bangs.

Then drink, drink, drink
On what you may be ever apt to think,
But so long as one hair hangs,
Pray the style may not be bangs
Then drink, drink long, but never drink to bangs.

—C. SULLIVAN, '16.

We got beat, but we won't give up!

TO "CLEMSON"

The light pink glow is in the west,
Though it will not tarry there long,
For it has bidden man to rest;
The birds have ceased their merry song.
I seek the moon and stars for my companions
And rest beneath the old oak tree,
Clemson College is our hearts' champion
And shall always be,
Upon the green crest hill dost thou stand,
Thou art old, but hast a reputation true;
Better citizens hast thou made for Uncle Sam,
Clemson College, we do love you!

And Such is Fate—

HE was a bachelor! Well, there's no disgrace in that. He was one—well, nobody cared if he was. Yes, somebody did care. Some one cared and cared very (hard)—altho that person would not acknowledge it. That person was himself.

It was a cold, snowy, winter's night. A typical one for freezing out thoughts of love—if there should happen to be any lurking in dangerous or fertile places. He walked briskly from his office. His hands shoved deep into his pockets. He passed an apartment house and being attracted by the conspicuous glow made by the fire, he peeped in. Forgetting the chilling breeze for an instant, he gazed longingly at the bed of bright red coals in the fire-place.

Something suddenly attracted his attention from the fire! What was the matter? His heart almost jumped from its accustomed beating-place—what was there to arouse such internal disorder, and especially with that organ which troubled him least? To be sure, he saw a woman standing in front of a window across the room. She looked very lovely in the filmy garments which were seemingly draped about her. She was beautiful, yes, as far as beauty goes—with women. He stared at her for an instant and moved on.

Upon reaching his own apartment he found that something very peculiar had taken possession of him. What was his trouble? Somehow his brain seemed clouded with a troublesome vision. Why couldn't he read? He would go and call his servant to prepare his bed for him. This he did. Now that he is ready to sleep, he can't. Is he losing his reason? All this he revolves in his mind. With the dawn of morning he hastens to his office and tries to immerse himself in work.

Another day ends. He starts home and decides on a different route. But what's the matter? His feet won't go any way except by that apartment house. He reluctantly risks one interested glance inside when he reaches the house. Again he meets the self-same scene.

Oh! In a moment he diagnoses his case. He is in love! There's no use to fight it! He is in love and can't help it and here is his ideal! The woman! The beauty! Standing there so graceful and dreamy. He must arrange some plan to meet her.

The Sororian

An idea strikes him. He walks to the door, rings the bell and asks to rent a room.

The lady of the house converses with him for a few minutes and asks him to come in.

She goes towards "the" door. Is she going to invite him in there?

She is! He goes to "the" door and then in. "She" is still there. Still lovely! Still wonderful!

Then the lady of the house snaps on the light.

Oh! Why are the "Fates" so cruel!!! He swoons! The lady of the house is a seamstress and "she"—a wax fitting figure.

HORRIBLE SCANDAL TAKES PLACE IN ANDERSON COLLEGE.

Renowned Baptist Institution Found to be a Hiding Place for Criminals.

ANDERSON COLLEGE, Dec. 21st—Last night at about eleven bells, above the squeaking of rats, the clanking of radiators and howling of cats was the stealthy patter of little feet—made by the kimona gang of Tramps' Alley as they sreakingly tipped to room 203—in the Alley. They silently entered the black draped door one by one, deposited their parcels on the already crammed buffet; mysterious excited bits of conversation could be heard drifting through the air holes and cracks in the door. Had it not been for the fact that the night watchman on the College halls was mother to our journal reporter, this thrilling, startling, hair-lifting, breath-taking bit of gossip would never have reached the press. We will relate the story as she told it: "I had done took my place between the ceiling of the first floor and the floor of the upper story. I had my left lamp carefully deposited in a conveniently gnawed rat-hole looking out on the dimly-lighted hall—my other I used to look around whenever I heard a little unnecessary fuss. Everything seemed to be running in its usual smoothness when 'bout then I seen something swing around the corner of the Alley. No sooner had I let that shadow pass out of my eye than here came another just like it, then another and another and another—they came so fast and thick my head got to swimming, and I couldn't do nothing but just stay there and watch. Well, they went on in that room 203 and first thing my eye hit on when I got a peep through a little bit of rat hole leading in there was people upon people by people back of people in front of people and every way; seemed to me I never saw so many people in one little place. I started to holler, but I was too scared. I ain't much for stirring up trouble when I'm in a good hiding place and see it coming on anyway. The only reason I ever taken that job no way was because they said burglars and the like stayed shy of that College place. Well, all them spooky looking things put themselves on mattresses; there was about twenty of the mattresses on the floor. Well, they stayed quiet a little while, then the noise begun. I forgot to say that the room was supposed to be not occupied at the time and that's what made one so scared. Well, as I was saying—the fuss begun—and now wasn't it enough to scare the life clean out of my body to hear such echoes as this? I couldn't look and listen at the same time, so I stopped looking and listened. "You all shut up!" "Don't you know if they catch us they'll kill us?" "Please close your trap!" "Move out of my way!" "Your feet are on my head!" "Stop punching me." "You're killing me and I'll holler!" "Here's some feed!" "Let's eat!" "Let's eat now!" "We are not going to eat now!" "What time is it?" "It's time for me to put an end to your squeaking!" "Say, here! My back may feel like leather, but it's no shoe; out with your hoof!" "What time is it?" "Stop picking on me, I ain't no banjo!" "If I can't eat some of this feed I'll chew on this toe here in my ear!" "What time is it?" "It's time you were out of here!" "Somebody hang that clock on that gump's nose!" "She ought to have a ring in it, anyhow!" "What are you hungry for? Hey?" "No oats nor rye?" "Who's sticking that dagger in me?" "Oh! Get that elbow out me skeleton!" 'Bout that time I heard such a gnawing! My sakes! Chicken bones cracking, something like marbles went flying around. Chew! chew! Never another sound save a groan or gulp of swallowing. At the lady-like hour of four in the morning all sounds of eating ceased and a terrific atmosphere of snores and moans was created. Feeling that my time had come, I slipped into the hall, got a pencil out of the trash basket outside door 203, wrote out my resignation and left upon question."

Hints to Students While in the Class Room.

Look wise even tho' you don't know anything. By doing so you may avoid a question.

If you don't know the question asked, answer the one you do know.

If the class does not know the lesson get the teacher to talk on Preparedness.

Keep on parallel lines with the one directly in front of you. By doing so you may chew your gum unnoticed.

Don't suppose that Dr. Kinard is calling the stable boy when he yells, "Hey!" during class.

Don't swipe your neighbor's pencil while she's looking; wait until she turns to swipe her neighbor's.

If you don't know the lesson have your room-mate become ill so you may assist her from the room.

If you are afraid of revealing your ignorance on exams., hand in blank papers.

Don't appear too wise in class room, the teacher may discover that you know more than she does.

Don't get up at 6 A. M. to study, just think the teachers may not meet their classes.

Society and Notoriety

Miss Hare entertained The Peter Rabbit Club last night at a Briar Patch Supper. Welsh rabbit, cabbage leaves, Easter eggs and carrots were served in wild profusion, and a contest to discover the best borrower then ensued, the first prize for which was a dainty "tar-baby;" the booby the privilege to go strolling with Br'er Wolf after midnight. This was followed by a dance and all participated in the Bunny Hug. This was enjoyed until a late hour, when the well-pleased little bunnies scampered away to their holes.

RITA: "James Whiteoub Riley, nut."

MARY: "Who's he?"

Rosada was admiring Rita's graduating presents and spying a five-dollar gold piece, exclaimed: "Oh! Rita, what a pretty gold nickel!"

LOU NELLE: "Ruth, I just know you are going to marry some old widower."

RUTH (Who admires the same young man that Lou Nelle does): "Well, that's all right so long as I get your widower."

LOUISE: "Em, I don't believe you love me a single bit."

EMILY: "I don't think you're far wrong, either."

Seniors

"She opens her mouth with wisdom!"

MISS BUXTON (In Senior English): "Miss McGee, tell us how Hamlet was saved from death on his way to England."

MISS CODY: "What about James Watt, Nell?"

NELL M.: "Why, that was the steam engine, wasn't it?"

IZETA: "Nell, what Webster wrote the dictionary?"

NELLE D.: "Daniel Webster, you goose."

DR. KINARD: "So many of you misspelled the word reformatory on examination, Miss Anderson, how do you spell it?"

MISS A.: "R-e-f-o-r-m-i or is it c-t-o-r-y?"

What Would Happen If:

Dr. Kinard failed to take out his watch in class with the ringing of the half-hour bell?

Rita should cease loving Davidson?

Miss Buxton should refrain from "reserving her opinion?"

Miss Stranathan would cease to argue peace and Miss Geary to argue preparedness?

Goode should understand what she's arguing about?

Mary Aiken would take a hint?

Gladys should dress simply?

Em would fail to criticize?

Goode should sing softly?

Bruce should cease to rock?

Ruth should join the "Yankees?"

Nelle Darracott should lose her heart?

Vivian Cox delivered an oration?

Some one should kidnap the Goode baby?

Emily and Lois were not reported every week?

Miss Geary excused anyone from Gyn.?

Jules lost the art of dancing?

The Senior table didn't want onions?

Miss Buxton's table wouldn't try to be cute?

Lena should resign from the Faculty?

Dr. Kinard were ordered to run a race?

RUTH: "I am going down to Mrs. Johnson's to get a C. C. pill."

EM: "What, a Charlie Chaplin?"

ELIZABETH: "Say, LaFayette, what does S. C. C. I. stand for?"

LAFAYETTE: "South Carolina Co-Educational Institute."

ELIZABETH: "For boys?"

Rita and Monk were conversing the other day, when in the midst of their confab Rita greeted a fellow passing by thusly: "Hey!"

MONK: "Hey! This is no barn."

RITA: "Well, what are you doing here, then?"

Current Poetry

Mary had a little waist,
Where nature made it grow,
And everywhere the rashions went,
That waist was sure to go.

Now, Louise has an appetite,
This you can't deny;
She keeps the Senior table waiting,
Until they almost die.

But what to me doth seem so strange,
Is why at dinner she's so nice,
And in answer to, "What will you have?"
Replies, "If you please, I'll just take Rice."

The cooing stops with the honey moon,
But the billing goes on forever.

What makes Miss Geary love England
so?
The eager Gym. Class cry;
Why England produced a Nelson,
Marie makes reply.

Miss Heleu P.
Sat on a sea,
Looking so fine and spry;
In her usual scrawl,
Signed a telephone call.
And said, "What a good girl am I."

GLADYS: Miss Buxton, what did you all have to eat at Mrs. Henry's yesterday?

MISS BUXTON: Why, Gladys—
GLADYS: I wanted to know because we are going to have a reputation.

The Poets' Corner

We truly hope that none of the following lyrics, odes, sonnets and ballads will in any way show the inefficiency and inability of any member of the Faculty. It is our duty to seek and delve for all manuscripts and literary works of art that may be hidden in the hearts, vest pockets or desk drawers of any of our members, and here lie the results of our efforts:

Our President was heard chanting
in school-boy fashion the other day,
Tobacco is a dirty weed,

I like it,
It satisfies no normal need,
I like it,

It makes you thin, it makes you lean,
It takes the hair right off your bean,
It's the worst "damn" stuff I've ever seen,

I like it.

“Made in America”

ONE day, while preparing a meal, an Indian squaw found that the salt was nearly out. She obviously could not say, “John, you had better go by the store on your way to work, and have some salt sent up,” as the modern housewife does—or shall I say “modern?” For in these days of efficiency, the esteemed lady will not trust a telephone even, much less a husband, to order necessaries; she must go marketing herself. But the squaw had not these privileges. She could not ask her husband to get the salt; she had never dreamed of efficiency; and if you had been able to speak to her over a telephone, she would have died of fright. She merely waited till the meal was over, then drew a pile of swamp-cane toward her and began to fashion something. So deftly and skilfully did she manage the slender strips that before the middle of the afternoon she held in her hands a small basket. Without delay she took the wooden salt-cup and the basket and started for the house of a thrifty young farmer three miles distant, trudging up the road in the hot sun with a papoose strapped to her back.

At the kind though silent invitation of the sweet-faced woman who opened the door, the squaw entered a large well-kept kitchen; by signs she indicated her wish to exchange the basket for salt. Her white sister readily gave her the salt, and set the representative of Indian workmanship on the high mantel above the broad, open hearth; while the red woman returned to camp.

This little basket I am telling you of was not a pretty piece for ornamental purposes, but just plain and brown and made for service. And service it has certainly seen! For it was in 1815 that my great-grandmother paid salt for it to the woman of the small Indian reservation down on the Saluda River. One hundred years ago, mind you; and it is still in use. “If it could only speak,” you say—but alas, it cannot, and the only way for you to become acquainted with a bit of its history is to listen while I tell you of a few things that little basket has seen.

Before long it was put into the arms of a small, chubby girl, and her mother said, “Annie, go out to the lot and gather the eggs for mother. Be careful, and don’t break any.” Then it became known as Annie’s basket, and the task—to her a joy—of getting the eggs, was always hers. Good fresh hens’ eggs they were, too—nowadays they are mostly farmers’ eggs.

The Sororian

Naturally, Annie grew up—and what a fine, lovely, capable woman she was! Finally a party of three—Annie, the basket, and a certain young man—searched the hay-loft; and it was over a goodly basketful of the staff of life for people who do light house-keeping that she promised to become his wife.

The little Indian basket now saw a happy, healthy little family grow up around Thomas and Annie, and it was handled lovingly by them all—from the strong, oldest son, Henry, to the newest baby. How it rejoiced in their happiness and prosperity, in seeing many acres added to the little farm and successfully tilled by Thomas and the boys, in knowing that Annie's heart sang and almost burst with joy!

But how soon all this ceased—how soon the father and son must leave Annie to take care of herself and the children with the help of faithful old Aunt Clary, and go to the battle-field! After that the basket saw many hardships bravely borne and made the best of by the mother; it saw her teach the children and keep them fed and clothed by her industry and ingenuity, delighting them at Christmas by giving them small things for which she had planned thru many a long, sleepless night—things which the wise little Montessori-reared child would scorn; it was the trusted receptacle of many a precious piece of candy, or a few nuts and apples grown on the place.

This was not all. One time I think the little basket must remember especially. It was during the latter part of the war when straggling bodies of Union soldiers rode thru the country, picking up everything of value and burning nearly everything else. So far the home owned by Thomas and Annie had escaped hurt—for it was hidden in a small, thick group of trees and not easily seen from the road. But one day a scouting Yankee discovered it and with his comrades forced an entrance. They ignored Annie, pale, but unafraid, and the children who clung to her with that world-old feeling that if mother is near, danger is far. The "bluecoats" rudely tore thru the house, pulling out bureau drawers, scattering the contents on the floor, taking possession of valuables.

Annie, with difficulty, restrained herself when she saw one Yankee pocket her husband's beloved gold watch—a rare thing in those days. Just then she turned to see a tall, well-built young man, evidently an officer, enter the room. She almost unconsciously caught her breath and turned paler; then she spoke:

"I cannot help telling you how much you look like my only brother. It startled me to see his likeness in a suit of blue."

A shamed expression came upon the young man's face, and with utmost courtesy he removed his hat and said, "Madame, I cannot say how sorry I am that these men have acted as they have."

With that he ordered them sternly out-of-doors, and was about to follow, but suddenly turned at the door and spoke again.

The Sororian

"I have no right to ask it, and I beg your pardon if I do wrong. Will you shake hands with me? You make me think of my sister, who died since I saw her last."

Annie instantly placed her hand in his and said gently, "God bless you."

Not long after, the remainder of the gallant Southern army went home. Thomas had been miraculously saved to his wife, but Henry had been wounded eleven times and had not completely recovered; so it came about that another burden fell upon Annie—careful nursing and watching—tho' to her it was no burden, but loving service.

And now the Reconstruction was upon the South, that dreadful, horrible time when it was hopelessly, despairingly hard to keep body and soul together, and when the exhausted Southern people were subjected to the rule of troops—negro troops!

One bright summer morning it was, that our little basket beheld the oldest daughter, slender, dark-eyed Anne, arrayed becomingly in a dress of calico, ride off to church on horseback with a youth whose flaming red hair and moustache proclaimed temper and plenty of it, but whose thin-lipped mouth and firm chin gave evidence that that temper was held firmly in check. What happened later the little basket heard recounted on Anne's return. The ride had been quiet enough; they dismounted, hitched their horses in woods at the side of the little building, and after exchanging greetings with several boys and girls of the neighborhood, went inside.

They had been listening for perhaps half an hour to the sermon: everything was perfectly still as the old white-haired preacher droned out his words almost in accompaniment to two flies, which buzzed loudly and persistently at each other at one of the windows. Suddenly there came a sound—one the little community had learned to know—the clatter of horses' feet far up the road. It meant but one thing: the "Yankees." People leaped up and rushed about confused and frightened—all but the young man, who quickly gave Anne into a neighbor's care and just as the bluecoats were entering the back door and surrounding the place, swung himself out of a side window.

He mingled with the crowd and was unmolested by the soldiers, who seemed to be looking for one man. They had been informed that he was there at church, and had come intent upon capturing him, for the Federal government had offered a huge sum of money for his head. This man was Manse Jolly, who had several times cornered the negro troops on their way to mischief, and had taken an active, very daring part in defending his country from the villainous "scal-awags" and "carpet-baggers," who used the negroes as tools. Strange to say, they seemed to be having a rather hard time finding the man.

In the meantime, Anne's young escort walked up to his horse, lazily un-hitched and mounted it, then turned slowly and leisurely into the road. Once there, however, he changed suddenly; he wheeled his horse and set off in a gallop, at the same time giving with all the strength of his deep voice the stirring rebel yell. The Yankees turned about in astonishment, realizing with dismay that the "mere boy" they had passed by in their search was Manse Jolly. They tried to catch him but in vain. He seemed to have vanished into extremely thin air.

Time passed; conditions grew slowly better and quieter; people settled down to work and tried to get back a little of what they had lost. Manse Jolly decided to leave his State and go West. And it happened to be the luck of the little basket to see this man who had helped his people thru many dangers without thinking of the danger he would bring upon himself—to see him, I say, the last time he was ever seen in these parts.

His last night in South Carolina was spent at Annie's home. And it was Anne who got up long before day to cook his breakfast, for Annie's rich brown hair was plentifully streaked with white and she was very frail, and was obliged to turn the affairs of the household over to Anne, who was a credit to her mother's teaching and an excellent housekeeper.

I think Annie must have shed a few secret tears before she told him good-bye, for this fearless "redhead" appealed to her somehow! One of her great griefs was that he was not a Christian, and when he left that cold gray morning, she kissed him and gave him a small Bible, whispering, "God bless and keep you, Manse."

And he took her hand in his and said slowly, "You make me think of my mother, and I thank you for it. I will do my best. Goodbye." He was never heard of afterwards.

The next June a very happy day came to the little basket. It was filled with flowers and brought into the parlor, where it witnessed Anne's marriage to a young Irishman from Ulster. One of Annie's greatest pleasures for many months after was visiting them in their cozy little home. She lived to see and love her first grandchild, a little apple-cheeked roly-poly boy who was two years old when his mother came into possession of the Indian basket.

Since then it has had varied adventures—has even picked orange-blossoms in Florida—until now it stands on my desk holding the letters from my friends. It is just the same plain, brown little basket it was when the Indian woman made it; but to me it has a priceless beauty, to me it seems almost a person. When I hold it in my hands and let my eyes rest dreamily upon it, I become the recipient of precious bits of knowledge, I come in contact with the personality of Annie—in short, it gives me a message: for in spite of the fact that it has seen younger days, it lives in the present, never complains, and is always ready and eager to be of service.

A Toast

“SARA BETH”

Our household's got two babies,
Little bits o' things,
Think I 'most could put them
Thru my Senior ring;
Aren't they awfully lovely?
Aren't they awfully pink?

Just come down from heaven?
That's the truth, I think.
Tell you how much I love them?
I wouldn't even try,
For my vain attempts at it
Would make those babies cry.
So, since I'm not a poet,
My efforts would fill you with mirth—
Here's to those darling babies,
The sweetest things on earth.

“The Order of the King”

THE light broke in splendor o'er the valley. The mountains caught its glorious hues and glistened beneath its shining colors. The tree-tops spread their leaves in greeting and reflected its brightness, while the birds, arising from their downy nests, carolled forth their joy of life. The great Lord Sun rose slowly above the hills, viewed his work with pleasure, and smiled a blessing on all the earth. It was morning!

Along the dusty roadside two travelers were making their way. By their soiled garments, their lagging steps, one would not need to be told that many hours must have passed since they had known sleep or rest. By the uniforms they wore, they were easily distinguished as defenders of their country, as soldiers of the King.

“The dawn greets us,” said the younger soldier, turning sadly to his companion. “Morning with its glory, its gladness, its beauty, which should be to all a new strengthening of love and life—yet which signifies for us only the beginning of another day of sorrow, gloom and death; the bugle which calls us not to joy and hope, but which bids us arise to the light of sorrow and despair. War! My God! What a way to settle a question. War! What a living death it is.”

“Think of it not in that manner, my friend,” returned the older man. “Think, rather, that you are supporting a great cause, defending a great nation, protecting a great people, obeying a great man. 'Tis the order of the King.”

“Ay, that's it,” broke in the younger man defiantly. “The order of the King! The will of one powerful man bids a nation settle his petty disputes by forfeiting their hearts and lives. ‘The order of the King!’ And what about the order of that greater King of Kings, who commanded, ‘Peace on earth, good will toward men’?”

“Ah, 'twas very true my friend, very true. But there is ever a time for all things, ‘a time for war and a time for peace,’ and this is a time—but let it pass. We must be about our journey. We are ordered to have this message to General Bohn before three days' sun shall set, and we must not fail our trust.”

The Sororian

“And if we fail to deliver the message, what then?”

“Then? Why death might be considered a lucky escape for you. It is good you know the way so well, for I am completely unacquainted with these parts. So watch you well, these lands are dangerous and one false step might lead us into one of the deserts which are not few in these regions.”

“Right you are. I have been caught in them myself. But never you fear. Tho it has been some time since I travelled these roads, I do not think my memory will fail me,” returned the younger soldier confidently.

“Very well, my young guide, but do not become too self-assured. ‘The best laid plans,’ you know.”

So they continued their journey, passing through the more pleasant, shady places into that hot and arid land, which borders on the desert. The sun, nearing its zenith, shone hotly down upon them.

In silence they made their way, the older man with his head up, walking as though he imagined himself in line with his troops. The younger, however, rather slouched behind, the still sad and gloomy expression on his boyish face. Firm friends they had grown, these two, since the breaking out of that most terrible of wars, in spite of the fact that they held to such different views of life. The former was of the older type, who held his king as he held his life, and who had won not a few recognitions and distinctions from him in military pursuits—whose one motto and highest ideal was “to die for the King.” With the boy it was different. Young and impetuous youth that he was, he held firmly to his belief that to “live for his country was greater than to die for the King.” Hardly had life opened for him in that country of freedom of the West, where he had gone to seek life in its fullest meaning, than he was ordered home to “fight for the King.” To perform that duty against which he had all his life stood, that he must go against those principles which he had so long upheld, this was too much for the boy. Yet in vain had he resisted. It was that or death. “But death,” he would say, “is preferable to living such a life. To see before me every day such sorrow, gloom and despair, and to know that I am an agent in bringing such desolation to pass. Ay, rather death any day to such a life as this.” But he had gone, fallen in line with all the others, to fight and die by the order of the King.

Only for a few moments did the travelers stop to partake of the limited amount of food they had with them.

“We must hasten,” said the older soldier. “So hot and dry has it become that I have completely drunk my supply of water and still am thirsty. You, I see, have not too great an amount, which you had better save, as it seems we are not liable to run across any spring or rivulet soon.”

The Sororian

“So it seems,” replied the boy, “this country is devoid of water for many miles apart. How my throat stings. I could soon make away with this, but as you say I had better save it until we need it more,” and with a longing look he thrust his canteen from him.

“By the way,” broke in the younger soldier, after they had resumed their journey. “And what is this order that makes it so necessary to be delivered to General Bohn before three evening’s sun-down?”

“It concerns the little country of Rütlin, I believe. Very stubbornly they have resisted the King. He is out of patience with them and (drawing an envelope out of his pocket) now orders Bohn to give them what they rightly and justly deserve.”

But the boy was not listening. Had not the older soldier been so engrossed in his own thoughts he would have wondered at the expression on his companion’s face. “Rütlin?” Had he heard aright? Rütlin! The old gentleman was saying something, but he neither heard nor saw. He was wrapt in strange dreams. No longer did he seem to be traveling those desert lands. Instead he seemed to have been transplanted to another clime, once more he fancied himself dwelling in that country where he had spent the few happiest months of his life. He saw once more those good and simple folk, who asked nothing save to be left alone to liberty and freedom. He felt himself enjoying life again with those whom he had pronounced “the most God-fearing people” he’d ever known—to whom he had avowed to some day prove his love and friendship. And that was Rütlin. Rütlin to be destroyed! And he, their friend and admirer, to be the bearer of the command of their destruction! It could not be! Suddenly his eyes lighted.

“Suppose,” said he in a tense voice, “the order should fail to reach General Bohn? What then should he do?”

“Unless the General receives this order affixed with the seal of the King, before three days’ sun-down, he will move his troops south to join those of Douvner. Rütlin at present is unsuspecting of an attack upon them, and so defenseless they would immediately be obliged to surrender. So you see it is all-important that the General receive this order at once ere the impudent country has time to call other countries to her aid or to prepare herself.”

Yes, this was the life he must live. The life that held for him only the destruction and annihilation of the innocent and peace-loving. Such was Rütlin. And he carried the order of their destiny. Ay! this was proof of his love indeed.

Yet, “unless the order be delivered in three days,” the General had said, “’twill be too late.” Madly the thoughts rushed to his brain. He was the guide of the journey. Only by his direction might the message reach the General in time. Then could not he delay the journey? The destiny of the little Rütlin lay in his hands. How would he direct it? Gradually his mind became calmer and he sanely viewed the situation. There was only one solution, the desert! Skillfully he might lead their footsteps in the wrong direction, get them lost upon the desert, and thus keep from the General the horrible message. Thus and only thus he might prove his love and keep his faith with Rütlin, only thus might he live up to the standards on which he had professed to believe, and upheld all his life. But herein lay the great risk. Lost upon the desert, without food or drink, most likely death would result. But what of it? Had he not said that death was preferable, by far, to such a life of living death? And what were one or two lives in comparison with the hundreds which would be lost as a result of his journey. Suddenly he straightened his shoulders. No longer did his foot-steps lag. His face was no longer that of the quick and rash youth. The set look about his mouth bespoke the fact that manhood had dawned.

They came to the turn in the road. Two paths lay before them. Swiftly the boy turned to the left.

“Are you sure, my friend,” said the elder soldier, “you choose the right path?”

“Quite sure,” he answered.

* * * * *

Lost on the desert! Only those who have experienced it can rightly grasp, can fully comprehend, the grave horror and danger of it. The vast stretches of burning sand, the mighty sun beating fiercely down upon it made it the dread and fear of all who might find themselves lost thereon.

Night had fallen. The two soldiers had dropped exhausted upon the sands for a few moments' rest. They had realized the full horror and power of that great monster, the desert. The older man lay sleeping quietly, completely exhausted after a day and night of ceaseless wandering over the desert. But not so the boy. Stretched upon the sands he lay with wide open eyes staring up into the stars above. With parched lips and burning eyes he lay thinking over what he had done, into what he had led both himself and his companion. Of himself he little thought, for him it mattered not. He had completely realized that before, had gladly offered his life that he might save a defenseless, helpless people. But as he noted his sleeping comrade fully it dawned upon him how selfish he had been. And such a good comrade he had been, too! Only at first had he been slightly annoyed and provoked toward his young guide upon discovering that they were lost, and soon he forgave him for his misdirection, saying to himself that after all he was but a youth and not to blame. Yes, he had brought his friend into this, and he must get him out. He lifted his canteen. Only a little water remained. Not nearly enough for one person, much less two. Yes, he would see to it that his friend was saved. But what about the King's order? By tomorrow evening's sundown it should reach the General. By tomorrow evening's sundown, if they still remained on the desert, neither would be alive to resume their journey. He must save his companion and still he could not allow that command to reach the General. Yet, if they were to escape the death of the desert they must at once be about their journey. But the water! It would suffice only one person.

Again he glanced at the sleeping soldier. Yes, he would save his friend, but the order—never should it reach the General. Softly and stealthily he moved to the sleeping man's side. More quietly and skillfully he slipped his hand into the sleeping man's pocket.

* * * * *

"Awaken, my friend, you must be about your journey. If you would have that General of yours receive that command, you'd better be up and away."

It was the young soldier who spoke. His companion quickly opened his eyes and stared dazedly about.

"Yes, yes, the command, it must reach him by sundown tomorrow, yes—But water—I must have water, my friend."

"No," returned the younger man. "There remains but a small portion—you must wait until you need it more."

The older soldier arose and straightened himself up, walked about a few paces, then started to go.

"Well," he returned. "Come, then."

The boy went to him.

"Listen, comrade: I am not to accompany you any farther. The message you bear I cannot conscientiously deliver. Besides I am too weak and exhausted. My foot, which I injured soon after starting, has become worse, and I can no longer travel upon it. Here is my canteen. Be careful and it will last you perhaps through the desert."

The older soldier, however, would hear to no such plan. But the boy was even more obstinate. His mind was settled and he would not change it.

"My friend," he said to the older soldier. "You seem to have forgotten your duty, your duty to your King. He has commanded that you deliver this order, and would you dare disobey your Lord and King? You know my views:

The Sororian

my heart, you know, is not in this struggle. My mind is made. I stay, but do not worry about me. Perhaps some good power will save me from the desert's grasp.

"If not, I am satisfied. For know you I had a thousand times rather meet such a fate than be the bearer of such a command."

Long and strongly he argued. Finally the older soldier, seeing the boy was determined, submitted to his plan. "But the water," he said, "I will not take it."

"Then I shall pour it upon the sands before your eyes and both will lose it."

And so the soldier took it.

Their parting was sad, as is always the parting of two strong men.

"Fare you well, my comrade," said the older soldier. "If, as I pray most earnestly, you shall be rescued from a death upon the desert, the world shall hear of your deed, and I shall see to it that the King rewards you."

"Good-bye, my friend. Please God that we shall meet again, and may my King bless you."

And so they parted in the morning's dawn, and the boy stood watching the figure as it faded in the distance. Then he turned his eyes heavenward, a curious smile upon his lips.

* * * * *

The sun was slowly sinking. From the distant West the beautiful rainbow of colors sent forth their dazzling rays.

Somewhere a strict and exacting old General stared angrily and bewilderingly from a tired and dusty soldier to an empty envelope; cursed mildly over a certain "order of the King," and immediately ordered his troops south.

* * * * *

Somewhere upon a wide and open desert a solitary figure lay. So quiet and still did it lie, that one would have scarcely perceived that any breath issued from those motionless lips. Soon, however, the figure stirred. Slowly he raised himself. Reaching in his pocket he drew out a folded paper and opening it smiled exultantly over a certain royal seal. Then striking a match to it smilingly watched the flames as they issued from it. The "order of my King," he gasped, and sank back upon the sands.

The sun glimmered faintly in the western skies. Slowly it sank until it passed with its wondrous lights and hues beyond the horizon. Softly and mysteriously night drew her darkened curtains about the earth, and the sentinel stars kept watch over their dead.

My Ole Mammy

There's a little old log cabin
In the wood,
Where lived an old, old woman,
Who was good
As the very finest gold
That the alchemist can mold.
How I loved her; she's my Mammy,
Dear old soul!

She's my dear black Mammy.
I can see her now
As she mopped the perspiration
From her brow,
Which was caused from chasing me
When I slipped from off her knee,
And went running from her,
In my childish glee.

Every night she used to take me
In her lap,
And together we would always
Take a nap,
And before she tucked me in,
I'd beg her to rock and sing,
Some old croony song.
'Til I fell slumbering—

“Dar now, honey! Don't you cry.
Mammy's chile!
Gwine be playing wid dem angels
Arteh while:
'Bye my baby, don't you heah,
Mammy singing in yo' eah?
She gwine stay right by you heah
All de while!”

Two Sides of the Question

THE dear little bundle of humanity, enveloped in a soft baby-blue blanket, was sleeping peacefully in its proud young aunt's arms. The new auntie was only fifteen, but that made not the slightest difference, for what she lacked in age was fully replaced by a large amount of self-confidence and dignity.

"Oh, she's still asleep, Mary," exclaimed Miss Fifteen-year-old eagerly to the baby's mother. "I suspect I had better rock her a little, though, for fear she'll wake up. She's been asleep quite a while now, you know. Isn't she the preciousest thing? What are you smiling about, you little pink and white darling? Oh, Mary, do look how adorable her mouth is when she smiles. I really believe that is her most beautiful feature, although her eyes and nose are simply perfect. Yes, it was dreaming of the angels, wasn't it? Sh-sh-sh!" She hastily began to rock back and forth as the baby tried to wriggle around a little and the tiny eye-lids fluttered ever so slightly.

"Oh, you don't suppose I talked too loud, do you, Mary?" she inquired anxiously as the eye-lids opened wider and two big blue eyes stared out angrily. "I hope I didn't, because I'm afraid you won't let me hold her next time. But you can't help it, I'll just come in and hold her when you are not looking. I positively refuse not being allowed to hold my own little niece."

By this time the baby was giving vent to the most violent shrieks, in spite of its young aunt's heroic efforts to quiet it.

"Please don't take her yet, Mary," begged the undaunted auntie. "I think I can make her stop in just a minute, although I believe she is a little obstreperous today. Now, Mary, don't look at me like that. I know exactly what that word means, and I don't see why you always look so amused whenever I use a word of more than one syllable. It is really discouraging to one's ambitious impulses. Well, perhaps I had better give her to you. Why is it babies always love their mothers so much better than anyone else? Good-bye, sweetheart," she murmured and imprinted a kiss on the angry florid little face. "I'm coming back and you must behave better next time."

* * * * *

I was sleeping peacefully; everything was so warm and soft and "comfy." I was enjoying the sweet dreamless sleep of utter unconsciousness of everything about me. I was completely worn out, for I had just gone through with that fearful ducking, which I am subjected to every day. No matter how spotlessly clean I am I have to be bathed and bathed. I do my best to discourage the baths, but to no avail. I even act ugly to my darling mother, whom I love so very dearly, but she is the most obstinate one, and I am beginning to think I will have to resign myself to my fate. I had just gone through with the bathing and bathing, during which process I had done my level best to assert my just rights, and at last becoming so fatigued had cried myself to sleep, while my own mother-love sang to me in a soft low voice.

Can you imagine my fury when I was aroused from these sweet slumbers, on account of the fearfully uncomfortable position I was in? My head was hiked up as though I were about to entertain a crowd of people, my entire body was twisted, and the blankets were all in confusion. I thought all this out before opening my eyes, but in spite of the discomfort I couldn't help smiling a smile of pure joy, because I was still in mother-love's arms, and hadn't yet been laid into that lonesome and hateful crib. But what was all that talking? It wasn't especially soft, nor especially sweet. My heart bounded excitingly. I began to think perhaps, after all, I was not in mother-love's arms. If I were, just one flutter of the eye-lid would be enough for mother, my entire position would immediately be changed to one of comfort and I might continue my much-wanted sleep. Delicately I fluttered one eye-lid. Instantly there began a loud sh-sh-sh, I was rocked back and forth violently, and my body was more uncomfortable than ever. Furious, I opened my eyes. I was not in mother-love's arms, and oh, horror of horrors, that detestable child was holding me. I might have known it. She persists in picking me up at all times and especially when I'm asleep, and can't make any objections. It's a mystery to me why mother-love allows her to do it. She also continually talks to me in the most nonsensical manner and puts all the emphasis on the important fact that she is my auntie. Even if she were my grandmother, she shall not torment me by making me lose all my precious sleep. I looked imploringly at mother-love, and her face was one of sorrowful reproach. I was awfully sorry to make her sad, but it was kind of like the bathing—I must stand up for my infant rights and dignity. I began my attack, which was always successful with that child, although it sometimes took a very long time, one piercing shriek after another, which I increased as she bounced me up and down. I was almost the angriest I have ever been, but at last came the farewell kiss, which although it was more distasteful than all the rest, I welcomed gladly as the herald of her departure.

I was at last in mother-love's arms again, and nestling my head on her soft shoulder, I sobbed sorrowfully, yet contentedly once, twice, but the third was only a small sigh of joy as I passed again into the Land of Nod.

A Senior's Retrospection

There are times in everyone's memory,
O'er which we lingeringly pause,
And the pictures will ne'er be forgotten
Which only the memory draws.

There's a series of pictures now painted
In the deepest colors and hues,
Right in the heart of each Senior—
Past school days furnish the views.

If you'll follow me just for a moment,
I'll go with you this museum through:
There's a story connected with each one,
And the story—as the pictures—is true.

The first one we come to will find us,
Buoyant, young and care-free:
Ne'er giving to life a thought serious,
For then we were Freshmen, you see.

But there is some shadow of changing,
Which creeps o'er the faces aglow
With the joys of life, Oh! so happy,
They never a sorrow could know.

Why, then, this transformation
From laughter and smiles so bright?
How can you but know—without asking—
We've grown to be Sophs in a night!

There's a saying in hist'ry recorded,
That the "Soph age" is envied by all;
Perhaps that is true—but now listen,
While an incident I shall recall.

The Sororian

Never in all OUR history
Has there e'er been a moment so sweet
As that glorious day—we were Juniors—
And our hearts very wildly did beat—

We were Juniors—be sure to take notice!
Our exams had just come to a close—
“Did we pass?” whisper: “Say, did we pass them?”
From the shout I guess everyone knows

That we did; and now we are Seniors,
Sweet, dignified Seniors are we,
And we certainly assume our Seniorship
With such ease as you seldom see.

We have worked with a will that's unrivaled,
Our work has been cheerfully done,
Our Senior days! Sweetest and saddest!
And such honors we never have known!

The pictures are fading a little,
Because here our school days must end;
There's a beginning of unfinished pictures,
But no one can follow their trend.

—M. Henry, '16.

Who Knows Better What's Good?

Bobbie and Betty are very good sometimes—two or three times a week, at least—though you might never guess it from their roguish faces, and then mamma gives them for dessert something which they like very much. More often than anything else it is Jell-O, not merely because it is more economical and easier to prepare than the other good things they like, but because they prefer it to almost anything else and because it is good for them.

JELL-O

is pure and wholesome, and it makes up into an almost infinite variety of dishes, some to appeal to the most fastidious appetites, and others to satisfy any healthy appetite.

There could not be anything better for the Sunday dinner dessert than one of these delicious dishes. It can be made as simple or as elaborate as any one could wish, just as the Jell-O dessert for every-day dinner can.

A beautiful new Jell-O Book tells the story of a lovely young bride, who knew nothing about cooking, but who soon learned how to make up delicious desserts and salads.

10c. a package

Her experiences are illustrated in reproductions of beautiful paintings made for the book by a Boston artist. If you will write and ask for a copy of this book, it will be sent to you promptly—free, of course.

Jell-O is made in seven pure fruit flavors: Strawberry, Raspberry, Lemon, Orange, Cherry, Peach, Chocolate. Each 10 cents at any grocery or general store.

THE GENESEE PURE FOOD CO., Le Roy, N. Y., and Bridgeburg, Ont.
Jell-O received the highest award, the GRAND PRIZE, at the Panama-Pacific Exposition at San Francisco, and the Panama-California Exposition at San Diego.
